

Substations

Substations are an important part of the power grid. Just like a brain helps the body work, substations talk to every part of the power grid and help it stay safe and balanced. They are important for delivering power to homes and businesses.

Substations are designed not to be noticed, but they are everywhere. They keep things running smoothly so we always have power!

