

We're in here pretreating ahead of the fire. Our goal is to come in and clear out vegetation and apply retardant to the poles to keep them upright. This one had a lot of pine needles. It was really thick duff. And then we applied retardant on the pole and the vegetation.

It's a good feeling to be able to help out others from the resource that PG&E provides. It's always difficult to see any type of hardship, but by coming in here, maybe we can minimize a little bit of that by keeping our routes open, the poles up. And it's safe for people to come and go.
