

PG&E Rethink HVAC - Contractors

Audio Description

The footage opens with images of multi-story office building exteriors. Dave Sylvester, a contractor wearing glasses and a black shirt speaks on camera inside an office building that is clearly under construction. HVAC ductwork is seen behind him as he stands next to the QM180 diagnostic equipment. As he speaks, footage shows office heating, ventilating and air conditioning systems, including ducts and central heating units.

Restaurant Owner & Executive Chef, Kevin Gin who is bald and wears glasses and a white coat, is seated at a table in an empty restaurant as he speaks about the importance of environment to his customers.

Dave Sylvester closes the segment along with more images of HVAC systems.

The closing graphic reads -

PG&E offers HVAC service contractors up to $2,230/unit for a QM-180 tune-up.

Dave Sylvester - The biggest compliment we get with the QM-180 is, "Wow, I've never had a contractor come in and spend this much attention in trying to improve the building." If you do not have quality maintenance, the customers are gonna have regular breakdowns. They're gonna be very unhappy with your service.

Kevin Gin - When it comes to contractors, most of the businesses are kind of skeptical. To have PG&E's stamp of approval, that's what means something to us as a business.

Dave Sylvester - You get to be the hero. You go into the building that's not working properly and you get to make a customer for life and improve the quality of the condition of the workplace.
